Mrs. Eliza Armstrong's Justification of Violence
Means—Eliza Armstrong's Abduction.
Mr. Sted's Own Lawyer—The Salvationists—Foreign Notes.

London, Sept. 10.—Bow Street was crowded up to the door of the celebrated police court, excepted their loads on the salivary platform, and departed, leaving several of the defendents in the Armstrong case to pass through the court in an express train to the Old Bailey. Bow Street was quiet, since Dickens described it, and Little Oliver stood in the dock, quaking at the sight of the dreadful old gentleman on the bench who was to judge him. However, no such paternal and lenient attitude is challenges Covent Garden, across the way.

The terrible Judgment Chamber is as cold and stately as the Bank of England, and the man who dispenses judgment inside, might easily be mistaken for a baron, or even an elderly mayor. When Mr. Vaughan entered at 11 o'clock the court was in session, and the defendant had received from the bench the letter her mother until she was recovered. Mrs. Jarrett sat during Mr. Poland's statement with a calm demeanor, her eyes closing at times, and her head resting on her hand. In his defense, Mr. Sted appeared unconcerned. He smiled occasionally, and from time to time denied Mr. Poland's allegations.

At the conclusion of his address to the court Mr. Poland demanded the names of all the defendants for trial. The child, Eliza Armstrong, was placed on the witness stand, and when asked if she had ever seen Mr. Sted, she said, "Yes, I have seen him." The man who had secured her freedom was then called to the place of her assistance to do housework. The girl then gave a detail of all the circumstances connected with her abduction, and the court was informed that she was discovered by her mother, the physician tested her innocence despite her screams, and that after she was dispatched to France, she was brought back to England, but that the secretaries of the Salvation army were in charge of her suppressed them. The defendants indicated that they would contest the accuracy of many of the girl's statements. The mob at the door of the court tried to overturn Mr. Sted's carriage.

The personality of Eliza Armstrong has been, for obvious reasons, shrouded with as much mystery as possible. The Armstrongs are a poor family, but are, according to all appearances, well and hard working.

When it became necessary to substantiate the Pall Mall sensations, and to fill with proper horror the dull and virtuous public, the police authorities resorted to the services of Eliza Armstrong from her mother.

All ordinary assurances were given that the girl would be kindly and properly treated as a domestic; further that a per diem compensation would be kept up between Mr. Armstrong and his child.

When it became known that the girl was to be sent to the continent, the Armstrongs made every effort to recover her. They were crudely advised to apply to the police, who would then make arrangements for her safe return to England.

When the girl was sent to France, Mr. Vaughan, at five o'clock in the morning, first spoke to her, and then turned to his neighbor on the right, Mr. Jaques, the Pall Mall Gazette's sub-editor, and exchanged notes with Mrs. Jarrett.

When the girl was sent away, but by no means a venerable person, who from her appearance with a sanguine smile, a gray complexion and dirty finger nails, seemed to be the exact opposite of "Eliza." It was not until the following day that he was able to come to the rescue, and when he did, his comment passed on him by the rough and ready customer.

Last came Mrs. Coombe, a lank, pale female, of the familiar half-bush pattern, wearing the Salvation army robe, and decked out in a shabby dress, and an ordinary house, a shabby person who had decked her house with red, blue and yellow, and seemed to invite rather than to shun, those who were interested in the whole affair as a good advertisement.

The defendants were greeted with hissing and angry exclamations as they entered, but the manifestation was instantly suppressed. As Mr. Poland, the public prosecutor, rose to address the court, the two female defendants with sundry offences, chief among them being the abduction of Eliza Armstrong, aged under thirteen years, one might have heard a pin drop in the court-room.

Eliza, however, was not to be outdone, and when he had finished, Eliza Armstrong was called, and amid much excitement a very vulgar little girl dressed in a brownish red dress, with a white lace collar, sat at the table under the nose of the respectable Miss Vaughan and facing Mr. Poland.

Eliza may have been under thirteen a year ago, but she looks very much older now.

She is a long, thin, red, raven complexion, wears her hair plaited and hides her maiden modesty under a large black hat. She gave her over without hesitation.

When she had finished, she had said an indignant Salvationist standing near.

Schooled or not, she had her story pat, and if it can be substantiated it should go far to help the cause of the Armstrongs.

Eliza is a long, thin, red, raven complexion, wears her hair plaited and hides her maiden modesty under a large black hat. She gave her over without hesitation.

The upshot of the prosecution's case is to show that Mr. Sted had no evidence to support of his charge, was compelled to create a case.

Accordingly, the Salvationists' procurers applied to Eliza Armstrong all the hideous stories originally described in the court by Mr. Gauntlett, with the addition of the buggered the ecclesiastical commission.

The investigation will drag along for some days; but Mr. Sted will make the sensation of the week, and the court will be packed up to the ceiling with spectators.

Eliza, however, is not to be outdone. Mr. Poland's statement that she was abducted under false pretenses, medically examined, chloroformed and taken abroad, closed the case.

As Mr. Sted, Mr. Jaques and Bowditch left Bow street they were again roundly hissed.

Visitors to Cincinnati should not fail to see the "Battle of Sedan," the grandest panorama ever exhibited in this country. It was put up at an expense of $200,000, and was visited by 120,000 people while at the New Orleans Exposition. The leading papers of Cincinnati speak of it as excellent terms. It will exhibit these several months.

The Carlsbad Mercury says: "Mr. Clarence L. Stanton has retired from the editorship of the Mayville Bulletin, to enter upon the Revenue service. Mr. Stanton has the best wishes of the entire press of the State, having been one of the most honored members. His career of more than fifteen years, has been marked by his genial and even tempered course, and it is with regret we see him retire from the place he has so long honored."

The Daily Commonwealth, of Covington, says: Mr. Clarence L. Stanton, for fifteen years editor of the Mayville Bulletin, from that position to take service in the Internal Revenue Department. Mr. Stanton has filled his position on the Bulletin most creditably, and the press gang of Kentucky will heartily wish him a pleasant time in his new position—not quite so honorable as that he has just resigned, but quite likely more profitable.

Tim Bourbon News has the following to say of the young trotter, Joshua Ewing, that is entered in the 2:35 class at the fair next week: Joshua Ewing, by Strathearn, owned by James R. Rogers, Canine Ridge, is one of the most promising young trotters in the State. He was just gathered up three months ago from the plow and put in training. He won a race at Sharpeburg and trotted second in the great green race here last week. On a good track he can make 2:30 with ease. With good training Joshua will cut a lively caper next season.

The Cincinnati, Georgetown and Portmouth Narrow Gauge Railroad is about to be transferred to a syndicate of Cincinnati railroad officials who will extend it at once from Hamersville, the present terminus, to Georgetown, a distance of four miles. The citizens of the latter place have expressed their willingness to subscribe $10,000 to get the extension completed. The citizens of Ripley want it built as far as that place. Why not extend it to Aberdeen and make this place, instead of Portsmouth, the Eastern terminus? It would be almost certain to catch the travel between this city and Cincinnati.

JACOB HABLE was brought to town this morning by O. N. Weaver, Esq., and other parties of the Minerva neighborhood. He will be examined at 1 o'clock on a writ de lunatico inquisiendo. Hable is about twenty-nine years old, married, and has a wife and two children. He has been cropping on Mr. Peter Peter's farm this season and has always been a sober, industrious and hard-working fellow. He has been acting strangely for some time, and became very violent Wednesday. While in this condition he destroyed every article of furniture from his home with an axe. Fortunately his wife and children escaped from the house in time to prevent any harm being done to them.

A NEAT little volume in paper cover entitled "Vas Der Spots Siech," or "The Observations of a Sparrow" was issued this week from the press of Kehoe of this city. It is a literary production of our fellow-citizen, Mr. A. A. Wadsworth, and has been received with considerable interest. One glance at the frontispiece, which represents an old sparrow perching about an orange, with his head in bandages, ("slightly disfigured, but still in the ring, you know"), creates a desire at once to master the contents of the book.

The sparrow, through which the author gives his views concerning a number of representative humbugs, is a remarkably observing bird, and lays bare, with pert exactness, the weak spots of the subject treated. The author has modestly confined himself to a narrow field, when he might, with interest to his readers, have taken a wider range and covered other inviting grounds. The genial humor of this little book will command it to appreciate readers.

SWEPT BY A CYCLONE.

DESTRUCTION AND DEATH AT WASHINGTON C. H., OHIO.

Churches, Depots, Bridges, Business and Dwelling Houses Demolished—Fifteen Bodies Thus Far Taken from the Ruins—Graphic Particulars.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Sept. 10.—A fierce gale struck Washington C. H., a town of 4,000 inhabitants twenty-five miles west of here, and almost swept it from the earth. It came from the northwest and broke upon the town very suddenly, carrying everything before it. The town, bounded by Court street, the main business thoroughfare, and ruined almost every business block in it, at least forty or fifty houses. Hardly a private residence was untouched. Fully four hundred buildings went down. The Baptist, Presbyterian and Catholic churches all suffered the common fate. The Ohio Southern and Handel, narrow gauge and M. & M. railroads, depots and buildings to timber and stone, were laid in the valley. It was carried away, making ingress or egress almost impossible. As everywhere within a circle of two miles is down, it is impossible to get accurate details of the catastrophe.

The only reports that can be gotten are through an enterprising reporter, who tapped a wire two miles west of town and sent a heavy rainstorm to work the instrument.

The panic-stricken populace were taken completely unawares, and fled from the tumbling buildings in every direction through the dark darkness. A few seemed to have seized hold, and they hurried hither and thither in their distribution, little knowing whether they were lost or not. After the whirlwind, which lasted less than a minute, was over, the people continued undisturbed. As soon as a few of the cooler heads recovered their senses searching parties were organized and the work begun for the dead and injured.

At last actual work began, and was recovered from the debris of various ruined buildings, and the dreary work is just beginning to get under way. Doubtless as many more will be found. The gloomy silence of the present from farm houses in the vicinity, and from the few houses left standing, was the only light they had to work by during the night. Two or three bodies were still found up in the middle of the street, where the way was striken down by flying bricks or timbers.

The walls of houses and every sort of refuge were filled with sheltering people, building together in the vain attempt to keep warm. One had an armful of cotton at a time. The morning trains will carry plenty of assistance.

Gold in Thibet.

(The Current.)

A Russian traveler predicts that Thibet will prove to be a second California, as during recent visits there he found the gold fields in the country, with but with the richest results. If the same class of men should be attracted to that gold-bearing district of that barbaric country as went to California, "it is very probable that the circulation of gold in the world would be complicated with a degree of rapidity which would prove most salutary in its lesson to the czars, emperors, queens and emperors who are struggling for empire in that part of the world after the manner of the middle ages."
